

Mexico Transloads

Traditionally, many potential rail clients in Mexico elected to not install rail spurs. High rates and poor performance drove this decision when traffic moved by rail in Mexico. Thus we have many companies today that are not rail served within Mexico. Since the privatization of the Mexican railroads, Mexican customers have been rewarded with dramatically improved rail alternatives. Today, many customers are building rail spurs into existing facilities while others are relocating in order to take advantage of rail service and economics. However, in many cases, the only option is to transload the product at the nearest rail point. This reality has created a boom in transload capabilities throughout Mexico. The other reality is the occasional need to transload product along the border gateway points.

With many different needs for transloading Mexican products, our strategy is to deliver an integrated capability along with service providers and the Mexican railroads. Regardless of the transload requirements, BNSF can organize transloads via a network of service providers. Simply call or email a BNSF representative to begin the process.
